

About Pre-Professional Advising

The Office of Pre-Professional Advising (OPPA) at the University of South Carolina-Columbia was established with the goal of providing USC undergraduates with the competitive edge in gaining admission into law school, medical school and other health related institutions.

We help students prepare for the complex application process to professional school and also provide information on various community service projects sponsored by area hospitals and agencies, job shadowing opportunities with local health professionals and lawyers, essay writing workshops, medical school tours and access to over 50 law schools at our Law Fair each fall. Please visit the following three divisions of our site for more information.

“Student’s Today, Doctors Tomorrow”

University of South Carolina Office of Pre-Professional Advising and The University of South Carolina School of Medicine (USC-SOM) are honored to host this state-wide Pre-Medical Conference, “Students Today, Doctors Tomorrow” at USC-SOM.

This Conference allows students attending colleges from around the state of South Carolina to participate in a full day of interactive learning, informative workshops, hear from prominent guest speakers, and have hands-on medical experiences.

Our intention is not only to educate students on the process of applying to medical school, but also to assist in career development and an understanding of the demands on a medical professional.

Faculty, staff and current medical students from USC and USC-SOM will be on hand to answer any questions.

All presentations and handouts can be found on your USB drive bracelet.
