

Neil Grindley

Neil is the Digital Preservation Programme Manager at the JISC (the Joint Information Systems Committee) , an organization that funds and supports technology-related projects and services for the UK Higher and Further Education sector. JISC is influential within the UK as an innovative agent of change and maintains an international reputation for the quality and range of its funded programmes. Neil is currently also a board member of the Digital Preservation Coalition (DPC). Previously, Neil was a Senior Project Officer for the AHRC-funded Methods Network which supported researchers in using advanced ICT methods. Prior to that he was the IT Manager (and member of the Governing Board) at the Courtauld Institute of Art, University of London. Neil has an MA in Computer Applications and the History of Art from Birkbeck College, London, and is also currently the acting chair of the Computers and History of Art Group (CHArt).